

Ireland in 2040: Managing change over a generation

A half-day seminar

organised by Policy Institute, Trinity College Dublin, in association with the Public Policy Advisors Network

09.00am, 22nd October 2018

The Long Room Hub, Trinity College Dublin

Implementing the National Development Plan and reaching the goals of the National Planning Framework

The Government after several years of preparation have launched the National Planning Framework and an aligned National Development Plan. The publication of both aligned policy documents is an important step in delivering a fully integrated and aligned development framework for Ireland. The challenge now confronting policy makers at all levels of government is to advance implementation. This year's seminar examines these challenges and will seek to suggest practical solutions to some of the many potential barriers to successful delivery of these two critical policy initiatives, especially as Ireland finally returns to a population level that last existed prior to the Great Famine.

Who should attend?

The seminar will be of interest to key policy makers across the full sphere of public policy on the island of Ireland. Likely participants will include senior civil servants, local government chief executives, state agency executives, policy advisors to the political parties as well as key contributors to policy development from the social partners. A limited number of spaces are being reserved for students to attend.

The Policy Institute at Trinity College Dublin

The mission of the Policy Institute is to advance new and innovative ideas relating to public policy, by promoting active debate and connecting social science to current public issues. The Institute's public events programme plays a key role in enabling the public to engage with the School and its work, and in ensuring that leading academics and policy-makers from around the world are publicly accessible.

The Public Policy Advisors Network

The Public Policy Advisors Network is a network of leading specialists across the main areas of public policy in Ireland. We support our clients in the preparation of evidence-based policy positions, research papers and contributions to policy development in the public policy arena. We guide our clients through the often confusing layers of public management in Ireland and at international level.
